THE SECRET OF BLONDIN'S SUCCESS [From the New York Century, August 27.]

The Wonderful power that Blondin posesses of balancing himself, is the point of curiosity and amazement to the crowd. By explaining a little of the philosophy of this feat, we may lessen the astonishment of some pecple, and perhaps remove the chief difficulty to a rational amount of self-culture, resulting in an improvement of the nervous system. The common toy of a man spinning on the point of a wire, explains the whole matter.— The centre of gravity is lowered to the base, and there it is easily preserved. The use of the pole answers the same purpose. Blondin's pole is thirty-four feet long, and weighs forty six pounds. Held below the middle of the body, it brings his centre of gravity sufficiently near to the rope to be easily controlled. A very slight elevation of one end and a corresponding depression of the other restores the balance of the body. The skill to govern the position, by an exact movement of the pole to the required extent, and not an inch further, results from practice. Those who have seen "the infant phenomenon" of Richmond. Va.; Nathaniel Tyler, Editor Richmond War. Standbray Chleger Co. tores the balance of the body. The skill to who have seen " the infant phenomenon" of the Ravel troupe on the tight-rope, must have observed the imperfect management of the pole in less experienced hands. Philosophically, Blondin and his pole constitute one body, and the extension laterally of its weight, is equivalant to lowering the centre of gravity, or enlarging the base on which he walks. The most perilous exploit of M. Blondin is that of carrying a man on his back. Here he runs a frightful risk, because he cannot command the nervous system of another person. To this experiment he will fall a victim. if he persists in it. The slightest trepidation of nerve in the carried body will imperil his centre of gravity, and put it out of his command in spite of the skill with which he adjusts the weight to rest as much as possible on his hips, and as little as possible on his shoulders. Travelers over mountains are warned by their guides to sit passively on the mule, without attempting to direct the animal. This is what a man must do who rides on Blondin's back, his own command of nerve must be equal to that of his master, or he endangers both. The fact of dismounting ting his eyes from the abyss below.

This is the whole explanation of M. Blondin's feat-his lowering of the centre of gravity near to the base, and his amazingly skillful government of it. We would not advise any one to try hazardous experiments; but the truth of this explanation may be tested by walking on the edge of a board firmly fixed in the required position on the ground or floor, and by using or dispensing with the balancing pole, or other weight, to control the centre of gravity.

"NOT ONE OF THEM AR SORT." The New Orleans Delta tells the following good one.

At a session of the Circuit Court of Mississippi, in some country town, the lawyers who were in attendance were in the habit of putting up at a house of entertainment kept by a buxom widow lady, of a very high sense of propriety, and great dignity of deportment.— This lady always presided at the head of the table during meals, and the place of honor on her right was regarded as due to the most staid, proper and elderly member of the Bar.

By unanimous consent of the lawyers, Colonal B-, a very modest, discreet and pious counsellor, was selected for this distinction. Now, though possessing many sterling virtues, Col. B---, possessed one weakness, but it was not a weakness of the head or of the heart, but of the eyelid.

He had the habit of winking incessantly and involuntarily, which, with persons who did not know the cause of it, left an unfavorable impression of the Colonel's seriousness and sincerity. He was eternally being suspected of what he was the last man to conceive of, to wit-a design of joking or quizzing everybody, all on account of the perpetual motion of his eyelids.

When, on the first occasion the Colonel took possession of the seat nearest to "mine hostess," his bland and amiable expression and dignified address created quite a favorable impression upon her ladyship. The soup was over, and the hostness began to pleasant smile; and with his invariable wink. At last it was perceptible, to the company, that the hostess was eyeing her distinguished these glances were always met by the Colonel with his usual smile and wink. But these amiable demonstrations were far from who began to frown and look very threateningly at the innocent Colonel, who only smiled and winked the more fascinatingly.

Finally, however, to the very great horror of the Bar, and the utter annihilation of the worthy Colonel, the hostless slapped the table indignantly with her right hand, and fix-

"You sanctified, weazen-face old villain I'll let you know I'm not one of them ar sort!' What might have followed this explosion of wrath, it would be impossible to conjecture, as the unfortunate possessor of the weak eyelid decamped in haste from the post of
